Bride Has Disappeared. The question which now disturbs the immediate relatives of the wedded pair is: "Where is the bride?"—for since the ceremony she has disappeared and the crippled bridegroom remains morose and silent and refuses to divulge her niding place. The wedding day of the McCanns is probably the most unique ever spent in ersey City.

McCann and Mamie have long had an ttachment for each other. Severa ears ago McCann, who was a brakean on the Pennsylvania Railroad, had his legs cut off above the knees by a Pennsylvania Railroad locomotive. He was given $1,200 by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. After buying air of artificial limbs, a three-wheeled chair and after paying for his grave, he out the rest of his money in the bank. Mrs. Kate P. O'Neill, McCann's sister, says it is this money and not love that has led Miss Reilly to wed her brother. McCann gruffly replies that his wife married him for love, despite the fact that he is a cripple.

Bernard McCabe carried McCann down cided to come into town for the winter. W. L. Love Chase Without Legs.

"We'll try another place," they said determinedly, and then began an interesting love chase, which took in a large number of Jersey City Justices. Wherever they went, however, the persistent Mrs. O'Neill was at their heels.

A whispered consultation was held by the bridal party about 2 o'clock, and McCann announced that he guessed he would give up trying to get married, Kissing her would-be husband good-by, the downcast bride departed, presumably for her home. He was seen out walking yesterday as usual except that there were two instead of one nurse with him. One of His name is said to be Hill. That of the

Instead of enjoying a honeymoon, the bridegroom was ignominously hustled upstairs to his room, where to-day he sits in a decidedly belligerent state. He says he is disgusted with the row that has been made over his marriage and cheerfully threatened a reporter with chastisement if any more questions were asked.

McCann is twenty-seven years old and Miss Relliy twenty-three.

Mrs. McCann, the bride, is a good-looking young woman of neat appearance. She has brown hair and brown eyes, Last evening after the ceremony she remarked joyously as she and her crippled husband left the Justice's ofnee:

"Love will win out every time! John and I can live all right, even if he hasn't any legs. I love him just the same, and folks don't need to worry about our future. We can't help it because we are cousins, and I guess if we love each other it's all right. We knew love would find a way."

BABY FOUND IN SATCHEL.

Abandoned on Street in Newark and May Die of Exposure.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 23 .- A new born baby was found in a satchel by Herman Samuels to-day. Mr. Samuels on return-ing to his home at No. 138 Charlton street, saw the satchel near the stoop of his house. On looking into the satchel were overturned. Three men jumped into the Hudson River to save them salves. It was with difficulty that they were rescued. Three Italian laborders were pinned under the wreckage and were severely injured.
